TO GIVE OR NOT TO GIVE

Every person goes through moments when he is obliged to make decisions of major importance to the course of his development.

He is faced with two alternatives. Each is the outgrowth of a complex of experiences and dispositions. Each inclines in the direction of a characteristic tendency. The selection of either will have a far-reaching effect on the shaping of his personality. It involves the discounting of a mass of interests and possibilities. The answer represents the moment of the transcendence of the conflict, and marks a step in the evolution of character.

"To be or not to be" was the poignant formulation of the problem of life as it presented itself to the most famous of Shakespeare's heroes. Hamlet after a series of soul-searing experiences, reached the point of doubting the ultimate value of life itself. Was life, with its whole panorama of interests and goods, as worth while as the vast stretch of blank negation? His question went to the very root of existence. The stake was "all or nothing."

We have forty thousand Jews in Toronto. They are of the seed of the people who produced the prophets and the psalmists. They are the descendants of the poets and the philosophers of the golden Arab era. They are the heirs of the rabbinites and the kabbalists of Lithuania and Poland. They are the immediate heirs of the Yids who inspired a Mendele Mochar Sefhorim, and a Sholem Aleichem and a Yehoash, and created the whole wealth of modern Yiddish literature. They have a history with a vast accumulation of experiences and values behind them. They are here to-day, the products of an historic process. Some five thousand years of national existence and evolution went into the making of these latter-day products who inhabit the City of Toronto.

Whether it please them or no, these people are members of the Jewish group. They share its historic background. They bear the scar of its brand. They are determined by its class propensities. They are exposed to its general fate. They cannot escape its limitations. Their sensitiveness to its destiny is only a matter of degree.

Now, to be a member of the Jewish group is to be the refractor of a maze of impersonal problems. Jewishness has its price. Every Jew is the subject of a ledger-sheet of accounts, which the world keeps with him. He must be at all times ready to make settlements on pain of being declared a bankrupt.

Living as Jews in the midst of the play of Jewish concerns, our forty thousand might be expected to have to make decisions involving the disposition of masses of Jewish interest. The luggage of our circumstance is scattered everywhere about us, and we cannot avoid constantly running into it. What is the value of this article or that article? What shall be preserved and what discarded—and how? Our life is full of questions moulded by the pressure of our Jewish contacts.

And what does all this Jewishness mean to the majority of us? Jewishness is a sizable factor in our life. How does it enter into the play of our problems and decisions? How much do we reckon with it?

A VALIANT KNIGHT WHO RUNS AWAY

By RABBI FERDINAND M. ISSERMAN

In the days of chivalry differences between knights were settled in gallant fashion. The offender and the offended met in knightly combat, broke their lances, clashed with swords while their friends looked on and cheered, and after the joust, satisfaction had been received and the erstwhile enemies parted friends. The age of chivalry has long gone and with it too its spirit of romance and heroism, if certain happenings in Detroit are at all symptomatic. There a Sir Henry scoffed and derided a Sir Aaron. Knight Aaron challenged Knight Henry to friendly combat but Knight Henry sought to evade the challenge. He wanted to break no lances—he feared to be worsted. So he scoured the country for the ablest warriors, mercenaries, to take his place in the lists. He found a veritable Sir Lancelot, a veteran of many tournaments, who hailed from Missouri. That knight lived up to his reputation and sought to delay the meeting of challenger and challenged by asking questions. But he asked in vain. And the day of reckoning drew nearer and nearer. It seemed as if Sir Henry would be compelled to enter the tournament. Sir Aaron, confident and sure of his cause, emerged from the grilling contest with Sir Henry's emissaries vindicated and confident. And when these saw Sir Aaron's strength and that Sir Henry would be compelled to enter the tournament and be very likely the loser, they used their influence to postpone the tournament, believing that a valiant knight who "runs away will live to fight another day."

WHAT THE FORD-SAPIRO TRIAL PROVED

The Ford-Sapiro trial did prove a few interesting facts. It proved that Henry Ford does not write Ford's page of the Dearborn Independent. It proved that Henry Ford does not read Ford's page. It proved that the people who read Ford's page believing they were reading his opinions were mistaken. It proved that a man who believed that history was "bunk" and Arnold Bennett a traitor cannot have opinions on world issues worthy of the consideration of intelligent people. It proved that servility to men of wealth, leads these men of wealth to parade in borrowed plumage which ill becomes them. It proved that Ford's anti-Semitic propaganda was bunk. It proved that the Jews through Aaron Sapiro were ready to face Ford's charges in open court, before a jury and the bar of public opinion. It proved that it is harder to serve a summons on a rich man than it is to find the proverbial needle. It proved that Aaron Sapiro had the courage of a David to face this American Goliath. It proved that the stones of truth can penetrate the heaviest armour of gold. It proved the wisdom of the old proverb, "Shoemaker stick to your last." Ford, stick to making automobiles and you may live to become a great man. But go into other fields and you will be as effective as a fish on dry land.

It would not be untrue to say that to the bulk of our forty thousand the matter of their Jewishness can be expressed in the formula, "To give or not to give?"

"To be or not to be," cogitated Hamlet. Life or death. To give or not to give—that is the question with us. Dollars or dimes.

Jewishness is not a question of living. Thirty-five thousand—or shall we say thirty-nine thousand of the forty?—lead such a superficial life that they do not even contact the Jewish layer within them. They are disturbed—from without—by Jewish demands, and they can understand the demand only in terms of money. What shall be their attitude to this whole ado about Jewishness? They experience a slight tremor of doubt. It means only this: shall they give or shall they not give—money?

We have just had a Keren Hayesod campaign. The term Keren Hayesod is rich in suggestiveness. It epitomizes the whole ideology of Palestine and of a creative Jewish people carrying on a vivid national life. It has the potency to stimulate within us a sense of dignity and self-esteem.

Our people were not moved by the appeal of the Keren Hayesod idea. They did not respond to its vitalizing influence. They did not become aware of the stirring of a Jewish consciousness within them. Jewishness still meant nothing to them. They continued their meaningless existence.

And this situation obtains in all our communities on this continent. Our Jewishness is not recognized as a vital force. It plays a small part in our living. We do not ask anything from it. We have no reciprocal relationship with it. We treat it as rich relatives treat their poor ones. Out of our bounteous plenty we give it, on occasion, a handout. Our problem of Jewishness in all its phases—pregnant with significance as it once was—has tapered down to the point of the question, to give or not to give. Jewishness has become a cheap thing—you can buy it with charity.—A. B. B.

Every Friday

Last week the editor of the REVIEW sent to the paid director of an organization in Montreal a note on the margin of a news item, reading: "We do not print news without names. Please reciprocate by making it worth our while to set your news in type."

The answer came on the stationery of the organization with the name of the director typed but not signed. Was this an oversight? Perhaps the signature was withheld to make a denial easy. Anyway, the answer reads:

"Thank you for your memorandum concerning the rules under which you grant publicity in the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW. Please note that it is not worth our while continually to see in print the mere mention of an activity with a large number of names of those who participated. If names is the only reason for your publishing news, then I am sorry to say that I am not interested in the publicity that you can give us. We are interested in activities, not in names, and we are entitled to the same courtesies and attention that we can get in local papers to whom our activities have a news value."

Well: In the first place the REVIEW has been very lenient with the organization in question and has often printed its news with one or two names to carry it or even with none at all—free. The REVIEW prints news of all organizations free, one might say, for the price of a few names. Why for the price of a few names? Because: White paper is the stock in trade of the REVIEW. In order to exist the paper must convert that white paper into cash either by selling it to advertisers or by running news that will bring in subscriptions. An item without names is the poorest circulation-maker a paper can have. Therefore it is run at a loss. An item with names is not only an aid to circulation and enlargement of the paper but is the best sort of publicity for the organization in question. As has been said in this column often, no article no matter written by whom on what subject, is read with anything like the devotion accorded the social column or organization news in which names can be expected by the reader. There is nothing new about this statement. It is a fact and stands the test of time. No community newspaper which ignores it can live without subsidy.

The above letter from the Montreal director was written in a moment foolish, arrogant or ill-advised or all three. Just because the REVIEW requests names with news the director is "not interested in the publicity you can give us." This is too bad for the organization the writer directs. It lives by the interest the public takes in its work and the director's job naturally depends on what the public knows and cares about the organization. Most Jewish organizations in Canada are not only interested in REVIEW publicity but prefer it to any obtainable. Experience has taught them how worthwhile it is. For an organization to decline valuable free advertising because it is unwilling to exchange courtesies is one of the million ways there are in this world of cutting off the nose to spite the face.

The organization in question has never been heard from directly before. Certainly no one from its office has returned thanks for favors in this paper. But the director does say now that "we are entitled to the same courtesies and attention that we can get in local papers to whom our activities have a news value." What entitles it except the say-so of the REVIEW? The director errs when he says he gets "the same courtesies and attention" in other papers. He gets much more in the other Jewish papers and there's no trick to it, either. The mere request for space puts the other Jewish papers under such a spell of flattery that they will use any amount of news from any directors written in any old fashion. But what good is it once it's gotten? And begging his pardon, the organization's activities, unaccompanied by the names of those who take part in them, have little if any news value to any paper. When he says, "we are interested in activities, not in names," this is quite likely true. He wants it known that he is creating and directing activities. What does he care about the people in them? His eye is more often on the organization board.

Coal, Cotton and Congregations

By RABBI MICHAEL AARONSOHN

A month swiftly passed into eternity. Departing from Cincinnati one evening on the "Carolina Special" we found ourselves the following morning in the famous city of Asheville, N.C. During the night we had crossed the mountains. Again mountains, mountains, mountains. Oh, these matchless, ubiquitous sentinels! They who live at Asheville see these mountains whether they turn, for Asheville nestles among them. When I think of Asheville, forgetful, to be sure, of the rows and rows of the attractive wood and stone and brick houses then I see her as the playground of mine spirits. For the atmosphere seems to be perfumed with a luscious aroma. The sun beams radiantly, carelessly. Many folks at Asheville have been revived by the ministrations of sun and air. We are not impressed with the synagogue. The structure does not possess a congenial personality. Hosts of people come to this city during the summer months. They would be glad I know, to discover among these supreme elements of nature's Jewry.

tabernacle altogether in harmony with the environment, a delight to the eye, an amiable sanctuary, a visible, tangible efflux of joy and strength and serenity. Rabbi Jacobson and Mr. Loewenfeld of Asheville, bring cheer to the stricken, who are bedridden in a score and more of sanitariums, private and public. We attended a Zionist organization meeting on Sunday night. In response to my appeal for a clarification of issues, Mr. Frankel delivered a heart-stirring address in Yiddish. Mr. Frankel has a son who is the secretary of the corporation governing the colony at Tel Aviv, Palestine. We are learning that men and women, young and aged, are far more susceptible to the clarion call of Zionism than they seem to be to the intimate, personal and mystical regulations of religion. We also met an Orthodox leader, who is called "Rabbi." But he is also cantor, Hebrew teacher and paramourly the official slaughterer of chickens and occasionally of a cow. Rabbi Charman spoke reverently of father, who was a distinguished Jew.

Jewish leader in Europe. We were told that the Orthodox of America have lost the art of contemplation, of meditation, of spiritual absorption, an art achieved by the European Jew. We were loathe to leave Asheville.

Winston-Salem, it is said, by reason of population is the largest city in the state. The "spiritual" leader of the Orthodox group in Winston-Salem is an interesting personality. He, too, is the cantor and the shochet. Our meeting on Tuesday night was held in the synagogue owned by the Orthodox congregation. Just before my talk, since this was the first night of Chanukah, the children under the direction and leadership of Rabbi Müller fulfilled the universal and ancient programme, including the lighting of the first candle and the singing of "The Rock of Ages" in Hebrew. At the present time Orthodoxy is the throne at Winston-Salem. A small number of ambitious capable men and women are on the outside waiting patiently for a softening of the temper of the Orthodox leaders, that all Israel in this city might be knit together as one at worship and in organization. Some young, very young women, eager for Reform and solicitous for the welfare of their children, direct the Sunday School in Winston-Salem. Their sincerity of purpose and their zeal are admirable. Baltimore has sent down to this city some competent torch bearers of its culture. We must also not overlook recording that Winston-Salem is one of the great centers of the tobacco industry, the home of the Reynolds family and factories.

At Goldsboro there are a few personalities whose achievements merit fitting memorials in prose. Goldsboro, twelve hours by train from Asheville, is a flat, tiny place, where the horse seems to be more in favour than the automobile. Rabbi Julius Mayerberg, retired, now more than three score and ten, for thirty-five years and longer ministered throughout the state, performing every religious rite for Reform, Orthodox and intermarried alike. As I recall the figure of this genial but now enfeebled "soldier of the Lord," I wonder what might have been had "Mr." Mayerberg sojourned in New York, his early home, and followed the profession of law, which vocation was also open to him. At Goldsboro the folk speak of the office of Rabbi with marked veneration. There's a noble little temple at Goldsboro. Men and women regularly come to services each Friday night and each Saturday morning. On Sunday afternoon we enjoyed an entertainment given by the religious school in celebration of Chanukah. In addition to the regular ceremonies the children presented a play and a pageant. Men, women and children from neighbouring cities came in to Goldsboro for this occasion. From this little city of Goldsboro have come leaders whose names are by-words in the intellectual, financial, educational, legislative, social and religious institutions of North Carolina. There are women past seventy whose minds and whose spirits are as refreshing as the air of Asheville. You will find the newest book in many homes. The New York Times is an institution at Goldsboro. Mrs. Sol Weil, of this city, conceived the idea of establishing the North Carolina Association of Jewish Women, to include all the women of the state without lines of demarcation. This association should in

Abie the Messenger Boy

By ABRAHAM BURSTEIN

"I'm glad the holidays are over," said Eli Margolis.

"Don't you like them?" asked Abie the messenger, who was returning from a tour of duty.

"Oh, I don't mind them ordinarily," was the answer. "But when I have to close for six or seven extra days in three weeks, I lose lots of business."

"But the other stores are closed too," said Abie. "And your customers around here go to synagogue."

"Oh, no. There always are stores open. Not every merchant here is a Jew, or a pious Jew. And besides, on this street there is transient trade. Most of my customers I never see again."

"That's a poor sort of admission," declared Abie, dryly.

"I have to admit it. But it isn't my fault. They live in other parts of the city, and happen to pass by when they need a shirt or a pair of socks."

"Too bad," commiserated Abie. "Why don't you put in delicatessen and radio departments?"

"Don't laugh. The way this month has gone, I may not be able to pay my rent."

Abie nodded with evidence of concern. Eli had been an old young friend, and he was an observant Jew as well, such as always found favour in the messenger's eyes. It was not well that he should thus suffer for his Jewishness.

Pondering the inequities of this world, Abie trudged back to the office. He found the manager awaiting him at the door.

"Good!" was the chief's greeting. "I've got to go out for a bite of lunch."

"I'll take care of the office," said Abie.

There were several messages lying on the desk, not yet delivered. When the chief returned, Abie would take them out. He figured the coloured sheets idly. He turned as a brisk young visitor slapped his palm on the counter.

"Say," he asked, "have you got a message here for Charlton Bullwinkle?"

This was a name not ordinarily found thereabouts. Abie turned to gaze at the stranger, who typified, in manner and dress, the efficient high-grade salesman. Then he lifted a sheet still unfolded which bore a message addressed to the questioner.

"I asked them to send any telegrams here," explained Bullwinkle. "Passed the place on the way to the advertising agency."

Abie handed the message over. The young man read and frowned.

"Say," he remarked to the silent messenger, "maybe you can give me a tip about this. Here, read it."

Abie read: "Preparing more intensive campaign among Jewish population. We ought to have testimonial. Get representative Jewish dealer in district to endorse Duofold Headware. Hurry copy."

So delicate in weave and color—will emerge fresh and bright as new, time after time, from the mild, pure Lux suds. There is no substitute for Lux.

Lever Brothers Limited
Toronto L732

Abie studied a moment. "Then you represent the new hats I saw advertised a little while ago?"

"Yes. Assistant district sales manager," proclaimed Bullwinkle.

"I didn't think you folks wanted advertising in the Jewish district."

"Oh, at first we never thought of it. You know our hat, don't you? I suppose you've read the ad. It looks like an ordinary fedora most of the time, but a few concealed snap-buttons change it into a fur cap, with ear muffs if you want them. Last week an old Jew meets our manager and says the cap was just like what he wore in Russia. I forget what he called it."

"A shtrimeit?" suggested Abie. "Yes, that's it! Well, the boss tells me to see a Jewish advertising agency and see if we can't push our stuff in Yiddish. You know, we've sold lots."

time become the model for the other states of the Union. It has reached out and drawn in the lonely and the isolated, the Orthodox and the indifferent, the wayward and the lost sheep of the house of Israel. It has also absorbed the Hadassah, the Sisterhood, the Council of Jewish Women, the synagogue auxiliaries and their leaders. Mrs. Henry Weil, known and beloved among the inhabitants of North Carolina, has long been a valorous mother in Israel, champion and symbol of the noblest idea of fellowship and service. And there is her son, Mr. Leslie Weil, whose name, too, is linked with the progress and achievement of the state, particularly in the realm of higher education. Between train journeyings we were privileged to talk to Miss Gertrude Weil, a daughter of Mrs. Henry Weil. We spoke of the coming convention in Washington, where women would consider the "cause and cure of war." Everywhere we have heard Miss Gertrude accounted as the foremost public worker in the state. When she is not "lobbying" for increased and improved facilities for children in the public schools, Miss Weil is planning for the perpetuation and development of Jewish life in remote villages. She is one whom the people of North Carolina are glad to honour. Forgive my seeming exuberance over the wealth of personality at Goldsboro, my overflowing chronicle of the Weil family. But as we found them unusual, so we must speak of them in extraordinary fashion. Further, there is Mr. Lionel Weil, son of Mrs. Sol Weil. Mr. Weil is a magnificent citizen. Among many things he can tell us more about trees and vegetation than most folks can. Dr. Claxton, of Washington, once taught school in this city. So did the present head of the University of Virginia, than whom they say there is no greater orator in the land.

Near Goldsboro there are a few straggling Jewish groups to be found either in a wee village or a growing town. Rocky Mount and Kinston have vigorous units of Jews who appear to be emerging out of the larval stage of Orthodoxy. Some of our Orthodox brethren still harbour the weird suspicion that Reform Jewish leaders are Christian missionaries. The young men and the young women of the coming generation look forward to the day when they may sincerely come to terms with their environment. Now because of the dearth of Jewish youth in North Carolina it follows that a dance given in one city or town under the auspices of a Jewish organization, or even by one family, becomes a state event. Young people pour in from many miles away, travelling by machine and by train, to this center where congeniality and fellowship are assured. Upon such occasions there is little searching of the heart concerning the inviolability of Orthodoxy or the reasonableness of Reform.

Here we are at Raleigh—the capital city. Clean, sweet air! Light, gentle rains! Friendly sun rays! Cheerful, alert human beings! Men, women and children who read and think and dance, who paint with oil on canvas and the like and toil terrifically that their "darling" Temple may withstand the ravages of financial imperatives. There are two distinct Jewish theological groups at Raleigh. The leader of the Orthodox element conducts a delicatessen shop and finds ample time to govern the priestly office as well as the socio-religious life. Among the Reform congregation a young woman is not content to enroll as a paying member. She is the first to appear on Friday night, has a special key for the Temple and is a faithful worker in the religious school. Rabbi Fineberg was eloquent in praise of the qualities of his pious band, numbering about twenty-five families. Some are not alone pious. They are impressively sensitive to the currents of modern culture. They radiate the robust spirit of North Carolina's proud heritage blended splendidly with a resolute reverence for Israel's history and purpose. I want to describe how in the Reform synagogue on "our" Friday night the men and the women and the little ones recited the prayers and chanted the refrains, as it were, while on wings of joy. There was no rigidly trained non-Jewish choir to exalt the audience, made up in a large measure of Gentiles. Raleigh, as inevitably you must know, is the home of Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy in the Wilson Administration. Mr. Daniels is the sovereign of the Democratic party in the state. His newspaper reflects the "Bible Belt." Naturally, when we chatted with him, Mr. Daniels touched on things Jewish. For Dr. Stephen S. Wise he bears the highest esteem and ranks him as a man of intellectual spiritual force. Mr. Daniels lamented the overpowering tendency to emphasize social service rather than private devotion. Appreciatively he recalled the episode of the presentation made to him a few years ago at the Brooklyn Jewish Centre of a handsome bronze tablet of the Decalogue engraved in English. We were entertained by Mrs. Josephus Daniels at their distinguished mansion. Mrs. Daniels is the flower of American tradition.

of North Carolina. One Sunday afternoon from Raleigh we journeyed by bus over the excellent roads to Chapel Hill, less than two hours' ride, to address a regular meeting of the Carolina Jewish Society—a student group including one co-ed. Our audience at this time was composed of Jewish students, Jews native to Chapel Hill, and a large delegation from the nearby city of Durham. Our assemblage convened in Murphey Hall on the campus. My address, according to the analysis of the chairman, concerned itself with the everlasting theme of religionists—anti-materialism. At its conclusion, following the usual programme, the meeting became an open forum. When asked for "first-hand" information about conditions in Palestine to-day, I whimsically suggested that inasmuch as I had never been to Palestine, might not the curious at least avail themselves of the printed prolific English sources of enlightenment. And the co-ed, whose father or grandfather is a resident of the Holy Land, eagerly inquired after the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Another interrogator would know about the Hillel Foundation.

After eight hours' ride during the day on a train from Raleigh we reached Gastonia. We were told that this little heralded municipality is the centre of the world's great cotton mill belt. A family of our co-religionists is among the conspicuous leaders in this industry. At Gastonia, however, the Jews are sadly divergent in their views, with a flimsy form of organization devoid of positive influence. There is no building to house the congregational activities. Orthodox and Reform elements present a confusion of beliefs and practices. Our meeting was held in the large auditorium of the handsome new High School. Mrs. Kareah, our young hostess, mother of two children and daughter of a distinguished Orthodox Rabbi, formerly lived in large cities. She is the spiritual director of the Jewish community. Five years ago Mrs. Kareah instituted in the front room of her home a school for juvenile religious education. In the beginning each Sunday morning she would motor from house to house, plead for the children, transport them to her school, and then give instructions according to the methods she acquired while a teacher in the Reform religious schools of Charleston, S.C., and Atlanta. To-day, still pleading for parental co-operation, Mrs. Kareah has three volunteer assistants, young, eager, ambitious co-workers. The school is now conducted in a room subrented from the American Legion of Gastonia. Along with Mrs. Kareah and her staff is her nephew, a young business man, who lives about twenty miles from Gastonia. Unfailingly he drives in to the city each Sunday morning that he may lead an adult Bible Class. Surely it would not be amiss to note that Mrs. Kareah was secretary of the Woman's Club of Gastonia and is withal an ardent worker for child and disabled soldier welfare under the direction of the American Legion of North Carolina.

The Happiest Boy

(A Children's Story)

By R. FREUER WRIGHT

On a lovely morning in May, Tommy Levy looked over the garden fence, and felt sorry for his neighbour. Poor Dick Cohen! He was a little lame boy, and could only get about with crutches. He never went far. He stayed in the garden mostly, or just went down to the end of the field path. But Tommy Levy could run fast, and play football, and on a nice day like this, which was to be a whole holiday, he would be able to wander over many fields, and by the stream, and he would have a lovely time!

His mother came out in the porch and stood beside him.

"There is poor Dick!" she said. "Don't you think it would be nice to ask him in to-day? You could take him down the field a little way, and I will make a special cake for tea!"

"Oh, Mummy! No! I'm sorry for Dick. But he'd spoil everything. You see! I—I—want to go a long way and find birds' nests!"

"I see," said his mother. "Well! It is your holiday, and I think you should do as you like with it."

She packed a little lunch bag for Tommy, with sandwiches and cakes and a bottle of lemonade, and he took a stout stick, and climbed over the fence in a lordly manner, and went away.

Lame Dick Cohen watched him go, and Tommy waved his hand to him.

Tommy walked fast—too fast really—if he but knew it; and as the sun mounted higher he began to feel the heat. Down in the marsh meadow where the cowslips were in bloom he mopped his brow, and drank the lemonade. He glanced at the thick hedgerows, and up in the trees; for about ten minutes he peered about anxiously. There should be nests of blackbirds and fieldfares there in the hawthorn; here among the reeds, beautifully and cunningly devised, he should discover a hedgebird's brood. And that lark who trilled so high up in the sky—somewhere near in the lowly grass five enchanting grey eggs must be. But for some strange disappointing reason Tommy could not find them. "Not even a silly blackbird's in the hedge!" he told himself, as he stood knee-deep in the rank grasses on the edge of the stream, and so bitter was the disappointment that the tears nearly came!

It was then that the first strange thing happened. A marsh fairy rose up out of the grass at his feet, and stood beside him, whimpering. She had a beautiful thin face and streaks of yellow hair, and a wild and wandering look. Waterweeds clung to her green gown, and water dripped from her pale fingers as they caressed the head of a huge water rat that seemed to be her companion. She looked at Tommy thoughtfully and shook her head.

"Poor Tommy Levy!" said she. "Poor Tommy Levy!"

Then with light footsteps and closely followed by the rat, she walked away and disappeared behind the willow trees.

Tommy was too astonished to be frightened. At last he had really seen a fairy, and he had never believed that there were such things. But she might have told him where he could find birds' nests, for indeed, like all fairies, she must know everything. It was too bad! He did so long to go jauntily home and tell Mummy and Auntie, and poor Dick Cohen—oh! particularly, poor Dick Cohen—what a fine walk he had had, and how many nests he had seen. Now he would tell them about the fairy as well—and yet—would they believe? He sat on a bank by the field footpath in the next field and ate his lunch; then, just as he was finishing the last crumbs he saw a gipsy woman coming to him with a basket on her arm. He liked her bright shawl and her kind brown face, and in her basket he could see laces and cottons and big yellow trinkets like those she wore in her ears. She glanced at him as she passed, then she turned again and paused a moment to look at him earnestly from her grave deep eyes.

"Poor little man!" said she. "Poor young master!" Tommy sprang up.

"Why?" he said. "That's what the marsh fairy said about me too. What do you mean?"

But the gipsy woman sighed and muttered and went on down the path.

Tommy felt that he must have something to show for his travels, so he picked some cowslips and wood violets and stuffed them into his bag, where they quickly died. He grew more discontented as the day wore on. He tormented a frog he found in a ditch and threw stones at a cat outside a cottage door. He had long given up looking for nests, and was trudging home, beating at the flowers and grasses by the way with his stick, when the last strange thing happened. A small man with a long white beard, and clad in a green jerkin and a pointed green cap suddenly ran up to him and put a hand on his elbow.

"Poor Tommy Levy!" he said. "Poor poor boy!"

Tommy was so astonished this time that he stood still and gaped, and the little man, who was certainly a goblin, climbed quickly over a gate and disappeared.

Tommy went home. He was very tired. He told his mother loftily that nesting time was over, but that of course he had had a lovely holiday. He had found flowers and done other things. He turned away from her and went into the garden with a great discontent in his heart.

Why! There was Dick Cohen leaning on his crutch, and looking for him over the fence.

"Oh! Tommy! Tommy!" Dick's face was radiant.

"I'd been watching a blackbird go in and out of the hedge at the back, and I guessed there must be a nest. The gardener's boy carried me across, and we found it! Three eggs and one bird hatched, and she's a lovely little mother. Sits and sings on a branch some of the time, then goes back to the nest. Oh! Tommy! Isn't it splendid?"

Tommy Levy did not answer. He was not very pleased. He turned away and sulked a little.

That night, just as his eyes closed in sleep, a brown gipsy woman and a marsh fairy and a white-bearded goblin man leaned over his bed for a moment, and whispered, as their faces floated into dreams:

"Crutches are not the demons that make a boy unhappy!"

Religious Restlessness in English Jewry

The apparent progress of the Liberal movement in England, under the leadership of Claude G. Montefiore and Israel Mattock, is causing considerable anxiety not only to the established Orthodox Synagogue, represented by the United Synagogue and its chief Rabbi, but also to the old reform wing represented by the Berkeley Street Synagogue, which has maintained a conservative attitude to Jewish practices. The open warfare launched by the Chief Rabbi against the Liberal movement, in a series of sermons, has had no substantial result in checking the movement, and just before Passover the second Liberal synagogue was opened in London, on Belfast Road, which is regarded as a sign of the spread of the movement and its growing popularity.

The Berkeley Street Synagogue also planned an ambitious programme of extension, including the inauguration of services under its auspices in other parts of the city. This plan, however, was interrupted through the serious illness of their rabbi, Dr. Joel Blau, who planned this programme of expansion and was about to begin its realization. Dr. Blau is gradually progressing toward health, and at a meeting of the Synagogue recently held, the president, Mr. Philip S. Waley, announced that even if Dr. Blau should find it impossible to carry on the work, they were still determined to carry on the task to which he had set his hand.

The United Synagogue, which represents the main current of Jewish religious life in England, also shows signs of recrudescence and activity. At a recent meeting of the Council of the United Synagogue it was pointed out that the income from the contributions coming from individual synagogues indicated an increase during the past year, including voluntary offerings, to the amount of nearly $75,000. This is taken as an indication of the increased interest of individuals in the work of the body and their appreciation of its accomplishments. It was also shown that the income of the United Synagogue was almost doubled in the past decade.

There is yet another wing in English Jewry, the extreme orthodox, represented by the Federation of Synagogues. This organization founded by the late Sir Samuel Montagu, has not maintained its vitality in recent years, due to a large extent to internal strife and bickerings. Lord Swaythling, who continued for a number of years as president of the organization, probably more because of filial piety than out of religious conviction, could not be induced to continue in office, and no successor has yet been found. At the last meeting of the organization it was made very clear that its financial status is very precarious and unless some strong personality is found to take charge of its affairs it may in the course of time pass out of existence. Meanwhile, a Union of Orthodox Synagogues, including such as are included in neither the Federation nor the United Synagogue, was formed in London, under the leadership of Dr. Schonfeld, the representative of the Frankfurt type of orthodoxy. The new organization has a membership of about 500 and in its constitution, which was recently adopted, is included the provision that all its institutions "shall be carried on in strict accordance with the teachings of traditional Judaism as laid down in the Shulchan Aruch and its commentaries."

The columns of the Anglo-Jewish press also reflect the restlessness that dominates the English Jewish community in religious matters. The question of reform and orthodoxy is being discussed almost weekly by various correspondents and the editorial pages are filled with arguments for or against, depending on the attitude and predilection of the editors. And this spirit of unrest is not confined to the metropolis, but is also evident in several of the larger provincial towns as well.

Cheaper to take
spoil food

A FEW cents a day will buy enough ice for average family use. Food costs you many times as much. At this season you need ice, not only to keep food from spoiling, but also to retain its fresh, appetizing flavor and the nourishing qualities so necessary to health. Keeping food down cellar or in a back entry is not safe, at any time.

Take ice regularly—the year 'round—save money.

Do You Remember what This Good Mother Says?

"My family surely does like good, rich milk. That is why we started buying City Dairy Milk twenty-five years ago. And I have always told my grown-up children not to take any penny-wise advice about important foods. A little thought and the habit of selection will save any risk of trusting to luck."

Thousands of mothers whose children and grandchildren have been brought up on City Dairy Milk will endorse this wise policy. They get Milk that is pure, clean, RICH, always.

LOEWS

Ramon Navarro's latest ultra-modern characterization is in "Lovers," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's sensational new story of modern Spain. Navarro portrays a young playwright, innocently involved through slander he is unable to trace or combat, in a scandal with the wife of his best friend. Alice Terry plays the heroine. Her beauty is secondary to a wonderful gift of acting, and the difficult role of the slandered wife is a new triumph for the heroine of "Mare Nostrum" and "The Magician." Irene Franklin, the stage comedienne, will be seen at the head of a vaudeville programme. This is Miss Franklin's first appearance at popular prices.

Isn't This Interesting Proof of Skill?

LAST year, Langley's recorded a greater growth than any cleaning plant in any city on the continent!

That this was not pure chance or accident is proved by the fact that again this year, we are recording an increase in business even greater than that of last year.

There are cynics, of course, who say that Langley's success is "due to advertising." But you can't fool all the people all the time.

Langley's growth and success is due solely to giving a broader and better Service—a higher type of craftsmanship—and spending the money to do each piece of work with the best equipment that science and experience have developed.

of small first orders around here. It ought to be a good territory. Our hat costs only five dollars, and hundreds of Stetsons are sold in the neighbourhood at seven dollars and up."

The assistant sales manager evidently believed in his product, and had the exuberance of youth besides. He poured out his story rapidly, though Abie was no buyer to be impressed.

"And what do they want now?" inquired Abie, who was becoming eager to reach the point.

"You saw—an endorsement. Maybe you can tell me of some one whose name would carry weight."

"I can do that," said Abie. "Most of these big stores carry firm names and won't do. You need a smaller man, with a good Jewish name, not a common one like Cohen, but something, say, like Margolis."

"Do you know any one around here?" "I do. If you wait a minute till the manager comes in, I'll be glad to look him up for you."

"Thanks very much. I'm not acquainted with the people here. All I do is follow up salesmen."

When the chief re-entered, Abie collected the three or four messages and started forth to deliver them.

"I'll meet you here again in half an hour, Mr. Bullwinkel," he said. "Don't wait. I'll see the man, all right."

He burst into Eli's store. "Tell me, quick!" he said. "How many hats have you sold in the last couple of weeks?"

Eli threw his hand out in disgust. "Don't talk to me about hats!" he protested. "All I sold were three! I wouldn't have done that either, but a couple of fellows came in to get a new style they just put out, a fur cap fedora they call the Duofold!"

Abie, shouting joyfully, without further explanation rushed to deliver his telegrams. He found Bullwinkel waiting.

"Come with me! I have your man and I can get a fine statement!"

At the store, Abie did the talking for the ordinary voluble salesman.

"Let me explain it," he said. "Here is paper. I'll write you something."

Soon Bullwinkel was admiringly reading the prepared statement.

"Say, messenger," he said, "you ought to be an advertising man. That's good."

"Eli Margolis, well-known haberdasher of Grand Street, declares that two out of three of all hats sold in his store during the past month were Duofolds. 'The people here,' he said, 'know a good thing when they see it. The popularity of this marvelous creation is fully deserved!'"

A week later another messenger delivered to Abie a fine Duofold hat, with the compliments of the maker. A merchandise order for $100 was received by Eli.

"Fine!" exclaimed Abie. "I always want to see an observant Jew make up his losses. Keep Shabbos and Yom Tov, and God will be good!"—Jewish Gazette.

A CATHOLIC FOR PRESIDENT

Al Smith's clear-cut answer to Charles C. Marshall, a New York lawyer, who doubted that a Catholic could be a loyal president of the United States answerable to the people and not to the pope of Rome, created a sensation. But why should it have? The intelligent man familiar with history knows that there have been many Catholic rulers who have been anything but subservient to the pope. For him there existed no valid objection to a Roman Catholic holding office. The bugaboo that a Catholic is unfit to hold public office because of his submission to papal authority was created by religious prejudice, and had no basis in fact. Governor Smith's ringing declaration proves nothing which fair-minded informed people did not know all along, but it should remove from many who were misinformed the fear that Catholics in high places would be dominated by foreign powers.

The United States has been the home of religious heretics. The Puritan Fathers fled to the new continent to find religious liberty. The Quakers came here for the same reason. Americans have always prided themselves in their constitution which guarantees religious freedom to all. But to-day the outside world is beginning to suspect that America is departing from her original traditions. The apparent opposition to a candidate for the presidency because of his religious affiliations is indicative of a departure from the old standard. If for no other reason than to vindicate the principle of religious liberty, the United States should honour a Catholic by electing him its President. Catholic France has a Protestant president. Canada had a great Catholic prime minister. The United States should have a Catholic president.

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regard to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

NEW SECURITY-HOLDING CORPORATION ORGANIZED BY INVESTMENT GROUP

IMPORTANT INTEREST SECURED IN FRENCH HYDRO-ELECTRIC COMPANIES WHICH OFFER SCOPE FOR CONSIDERABLE EXPANSION—STRONG BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

A new utility security-holding corporation has been organized under a Dominion charter which has for its purpose the acquisition of foreign securities, as the title "Foreign Power Securities Corporation, Limited," implies.

Primarily this corporation is interested in hydro-electric operating companies in France where an excellent field is considered to exist for further development. It has been organized by the well-known Canadian investment banking house of Nesbitt, Thomson & Co., Limited.

The company is capitalized at $5,000,000, 6 per cent. cumulative participating preferred shares, and 100,000 shares of no par value, common stock.

The prospectus states that Foreign Power Securities was organized to acquire selected securities or electric light and power companies operating in foreign countries. It has acquired a substantial interest in the securities of L'Energie Industrielle, and indirectly in all its subsidiaries, as well as in two of them directly. These are L'Union Hydro-Electrique Armoricaire and Société Hydro-Electrique du Sud-Est. L'Energie Industrielle and subsidiaries have plants operating in various localities in France.

It is pointed out that the many opportunities for future development of the hydro-electric industry in France should afford profitable opportunities for this Corporation, as France has water power capable of 10,000,000 horse power development, of which only about 2,000,000 horse power have so far been developed.

L'Energie Industrielle has been in successful operation since 1906 and besides its own system owns or controls and operates ten subsidiaries. The combined system comprises 23 hydro plants, 15 steam and gas electric plants, 2,470 miles of high tension transmission and primary distribution lines and 1,734 miles of secondary distribution lines. Its aggregate hydro-electric resources are capable of developing 122,600 h.p., of which 43,600 h.p. are now installed and in operation. The steam and gas electric plants develop 44,300 h.p. and in addition a further 44,000 h.p. are purchased, making a total of 131,000 h.p. presently available for distribution throughout the system.

Its operations, with the exception of a small plant serving 3,000 customers in Madagascar, are well distributed throughout France, including Brittany and the cities of St. Nazaire and Vannes, the Pyrenees and the cities of Bayonne and Biarritz, the Côte d'Azur and the cities of Mentone and Sante Carlo. In all, the 972 communities served have a combined population of approximately 1,200,000, the entire system having 170,000 connected customers on March 31 last.

The prospectus also contains a description of the two subsidiaries referred to as having been included directly in the securities acquired. These are Société Hydro-Electrique du Sud-Est and L'Union Hydro-Electrique Armoricaire. The former owns several water powers aggregating 59,000 h.p. ultimate capacity. The falls of the Allermint have already been developed with 2,400 h.p. installed and a third unit will shortly be installed to bring the capacity up to 5,600 h.p. The development of the falls of the Royn is nearing completion and will be in operation by June 1, 1927, with an installed capacity of 10,000 h.p. The most important of the undeveloped powers of the company is on the Sarennes, where the ultimate installed capacity will be 44,000 h.p. These powers are being developed or held in reserve to supply the needs of various distributing subsidiaries of the parent company, particularly in the south-eastern part of France.

L'Union Hydro-Electrique Armoricaire is another subsidiary of L'Energie Industrielle which owns an important water power in the Elevet at Guereloden, being the only water power of substantial capacity in Brittany, or, in fact, in the northern part of France. It is situated in the centre of the region of Brittany where the distribution of power is largely controlled by the parent company. The power will be supplied to furnish the requirements of the parent company and its subsidiaries in this region. The development is already well under way and the plant is expected to be in operation about May 1, 1928, with an installed capacity of 20,000 h.p.

The board of directors of Foreign Power Securities Corporation is composed of four Montrealers prominently identified with the power industry in Canada and three French members associated with the companies in France above referred to. They are: A. J. Nesbitt, President of Power Corporation of Canada, Limited; J. B. Woodyatt, President Southern Canada Power Company, Limited; P. A. Thomson, director, Winnipeg Electric Company, Limited; J. Versailles, President of Versailles & Company, Limited; P. Durant, Paris, President, L'Energie Industrielle; General R. Brutinel, Paris, vice-president, Banque Adam; and R. Despres, Paris, Engineer, L'Energie Industrielle.

Sir Austin Chamberlain, in his reply, confirmed the report and said that his views were known to him, "but I am entitled to assume that the Italian Government would not appoint a consul-general who would use his appointment contrary to the interests of the country to which he was accredited."

Harnessing the WATER POWERS of a Nation

The advantages of hydro-electric companies are many.

THE source of power is perpetual. The industry has few labour problems. Earnings come from diversified sources. Earnings do not fluctuate widely. Securities are widely distributed. Markets are not nearly fully developed. No inventories or inventory losses. Virtually a cash business. Service is usually without competition. Indispensable service is supplied.
